L. J. Bolton Denies Re- port Sent Out From Mt. Vernon

NEVER MADE STATEMENT

Will Devote His Time to Transfer Business in Newark—Friends Meet Him at Depot.

Lewis J. Bolton, acquitted by a Knox county jury Tuesday afternoon of aiding and abetting in the lynching of Carl Etherington last July, arrived in Newark at 7 o'clock on the B. & O. last evening from Mt. Vernon. He was met at the train by a large crowd of acquaintances and friends, all anxious to congratulate him on his acquittal at the hands of the jury.

Mr. Bolton called at the jail, where he had been confined since the first of last September, secured his belongings, thanked Sheriff Frank Slabough and his deputies for the excellent treatment which he had received at their hands and then bid the prisoners confined there good bye. He left immediately for his home to greet his mother and the members of his family who were anxiously awaiting him.

Several morning papers carried a sensational story to the effect that Mr. Bolton was returning to Newark and would announce his name as candidate for mayor.

An advocate representative met Mr. Bolton Wednesday morning and asked him regarding the veracity of the statement, to which he replied, "The story is ridiculous and originated in the mind of some imaginative correspondent who either wished to create a sentiment for a cause or else thought to put something over a competitor."

Mr. Bolton stated that he was glad to be home again among friends. He said that he had never had any fear of the outcome of his case but that the strain of the last few days was far from agreeable.

He has no definite plans for the present further than to remain at home and assist in the management of the Bolton transfer line. His health is good, despite his long confinement while awaiting trial, and Wednesday he was engaged in calling on his friends and thanking those who stood loyally by him through his trying ordeal.

LICKING COUNTY MUST PAY COSTS

Mt. Vernon, April 26.—An unusual scene was enacted when the Bolton jury reported Tuesday evening, and one which has never been equaled in the Knox county court house.

A number of spectators broke into cheers and hand clapping started all over the room. Bolton whose face had never betrayed the slightest emotion for hours, could stand the strain no longer, and the tears began coursing down his face. His sister, Mrs. Alice Miller, when she heard the words "not guilty," threw herself sobbing into her brother's arms.

Both then shook hands with all the jurors and thanked them personally. Tears streamed down the face of Mr. James Linehan, uncle of Bolton, as he heard the verdict of acquittal and with Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bolton, he rushed to the jury box and all thanked the twelve men.

Spectators rushed for the rail all anxious to congratulate the man who had just been freed of a terrible accusation. Judge Wickham made no effort to stop the demonstration but allowed it to continue for some length before order was restored, after which Judge Waight asked for the immediate discharge of the prisoner.

Judge Wickham stated that there was no attorney for the state present and as there was no indictment against defendant he should be immediately discharged. This was done and Bolton left the court room, a free man.

SUIT IS FILED TO RESTRAIN GAS COMPANY

City Will Fight Proposed New Rate For Fuel in City of Newark. City Gives Bond.

"City of Newark, Ohio, by Frank A. Bolton, solicitor, vs. Newark Natural Gas & Fuel Co." This case was heard in common pleas court on Wednesday upon the application of the city for injunction to restrain the gas company from collecting the proposed increased rate per thousand for gas furnished the citizens of Newark. The question was argued as to whether a bond should be required before a temporary injunction should be allowed. The court allowed a temporary injunction and ordered a bond to be given in the sum of three thousand dollars by the city.

The case will come up for hearing within a few days upon the question of whether the temporary injunction allowed on Wednesday shall be made permanent.

Upon the city giving a bond in the sum of $3,000 the preliminary order of injunction asked for will become operative until the case is heard, and the case will be set down for hearing as to the right of the gas company to increase the rate for gas over the amount specified in the ordinance passed by the council.

DAYLIGHT ROBBERY IN CHICAGO

Chicago, April 26.—Four men in an auto drove up to the jewelry store of Edward Alberti & Son here today, entered the store with drawn revolvers, and holding up the clerks escaped with jewels variously estimated at from $24,000 to $50,000.

Alberti and his sons were examining a large sample case of rare stones being exhibited by Emil Strauss, a jewelry salesman.

The four men drove up in the car and one remained in it with the engine going. The other three pointed pistols at the Alberti and Strauss and backed them to the rear of the store.

They then stole two large cases of diamonds, took Strauss' sample cases, and stuffed their pockets full of gold watches. Three hundred dollars cash was taken from the safe.

Then telling the jeweler that a move meant death, they backed to the street, jumped into the auto and speeded away. Alberti claims to have caught the number of the machine as it disappeared.

DETECTIVE WM. J. BURNS ARRESTED

Is Charged With Kidnap- ping J. J. McNamara at Indianapolis

RELEASED UNDER BOND

Three Attorneys Held for Com- plicity—Suspects Travel Un- der Heavy Armed Guard.

Indianapolis, April 26.—Detective William J. Burns was served with a warrant at 6 o'clock yesterday evening, charging him with complicity in the alleged kidnaping of J. J. McNamara, secretary treasurer of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, and three attorneys, who were arraigned on the same charge, spent two hours in jail because of delay in obtaining bonds for them.

The attorneys imprisoned were Walter Drew and J. A. G. Badger, of New York, counsel and assistant counsel for the National Erectors' association, and W. Joseph Ford, assistant district attorney of Los Angeles.

Burns was arrested on the street as he was on his way to the court of Justice of the Peace Manning to surrender himself. Constables had searched for him all day.

He was released under $10,000 bond to appear before the grand jury to testify today. Drew, Badger and Ford had been released from jail under bonds of the same sum. They had waived preliminary examination and had been bound over to the grand jury.

Frank Fox, a chauffeur, charged with having assisted in the alleged kidnaping of McNamara, in that he had driven the automobile in which McNamara was taken from this city last Saturday, was released under $5,000 bond to appear before the grand jury.

BURNS BEFORE JURY.

Indianapolis, Ind., April 26.—With the first excitement over the arrest of J. J. McNamara somewhat allayed today interest centers in the probable action of the grand jury. It will probably investigate the discovery of dynamite here first.

W. J. Burns, the detective, appeared before the grand jury this morning prepared to lay before it a complete history of the developments which led to McNamara's arrest.

He received his summons yesterday and at once refused to discuss the case further until he had appeared before the grand jury.

All the men arrested on kidnaping charges are out on bond today. Assistant District Attorney Ford of Los Angeles bitterly denounced the local authorities for his arrest. He says he was here simply to gather evidence and had no part in McNamara's arrest.

CHANGE OF VENUE.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 26.—The trials of John J. and James W. McNamara and Orville McManigal will not be held here if the attorneys for the defense can prevent it. Judge C. M. Hilton has been retained as associate counsel and he announced today that his first move will be a demand for a change of venue on the grounds of prejudice against the defendants.

He requests the public at large to withhold their opinion until all the evidence is in. The three accused men will probably reach here this afternoon.

They will be allowed to consult with Attorney Hilton at once and make any arrangements. They passed through Flagstaff, Ariz., last night. District Attorney Frederick says he was ready to begin the trials tomorrow, but will wait the convenience of the defense.

He issued a scathing denunciation of the Indianapolis kidnaping arrest saying it was the work of pettifogging lawyers.

PRISONERS SHACKLED.

Needles, Cal., April 26.—The two McNamaras and Orville McManigal passed through here early today. The prisoners were heavily shackled and six of the detectives guarding them are armed with rifles.

OFFICER BURKE LANDS BADGER WHILE AT WORK

PATROLMAN REMEMBERS FACE OF BURGLAR SENT OUT BY THE ASHLAND POLICE.

Missing Property Found When Badger's Suit Case Was Searched at Boarding House.

The Ashland, O., chief of police arrived in this city this afternoon and left at 1:55, having in custody E. J. Badger, captured by Officer C. O. Burke, and wanted on a burglary charge.

The capture of Badger is considered an important one and credit is due Officer Burke for shrewd work. A descriptive card of Badger was sent the local department about a month ago and the men were told to keep a lookout for the suspect as he might head this way. Officer Burke was walking through the alley Tuesday noon where the wrecking of the old Lake livery barn is occurring and glancing up thought he recognized the man wanted at Ashland. He called the foreman and requested that the fellow be sent down to work on the ground floor. This was done and Officer Burke then got a good look at the fellow and recognized him as the one wanted at Ashland.

Badger was placed under arrest and the Ashland authorities notified. He is accused of stealing clothing, 100 coins and $55 at the Y. M. C. A. building. All of the property was found in his suit case.

BIG FINANCE BILL PASSES THE HOUSE

Rep. Fulton Opposes the Appropriations for Licking County

FOR LYNCHING CASES

Strong Showing Made by Mr. Fulton in Behalf of His Own County and City.

Columbus, April 26.—Most of the legislative day was devoted in the House yesterday to the consideration of the general appropriation bill. After much discussion and many amendments rejected the bill passed by a vote of 85 to 7. The negative votes were Canty of Logan, Day of Ross, Fulton of Licking, Kinble of Adams, Lowry of Henry, Reynolds of Franklin, White of Sandusky.

The opposition of Representative W. D. Fulton to the bill was the appropriations in connection with the Newark lynching cases, which he characterized as wholly unnecessary. In every legal way Licking county and Newark city had done their whole duty from the very day after the tragedy without the necessary expenditure of a dollar on the part of the state.

Charging that the state already has spent a fifth of a million dollars for the Columbus strike riots and the Newark lynching, Representatives Fulton of Licking county and Smith of Butler, Democrats, made an attack in the house, Tuesday morning, on the proposed appropriation of $8000 for prosecution of the Newark cases. They failed, however, to take the $8000 out of the appropriation bill.

Mr. Fulton charged that the expense was useless and especially attacked the $2,350 expense for the capture of Lewis Bolton.

"I have knowledge that Bolton was at the Southern hotel in Columbus for several days and made no effort to conceal his presence," said Mr. Fulton. "Yet we are asked to pay over $2,000 for the trouble of catching him." Mr. Fulton further charged that all of the accused rioters in Newark were willing to plead guilty to manslaughter, but that the attorneys for the state insisted on having trials just to get the fees.

Mr. Fulton declared with emphasis that the Newark courts had done their full duty and promptly met every expenditure, and that there is no justification for any appropriation from the state. He declared that the state had last year appropriated $180,000 for the suppression of trouble at Columbus and Newark. No soldiers had ever been sent to Newark and order had existed there from the day following the lynching.

In discussing the expenditure of such a large sum of money for detectives to search for Lewis Bolton, when the greater part of the time he was in the city of Columbus, Mr. Fulton predicted that the celebrated prisoner would be acquitted, and this prediction came true within a few hours.

Fulton was supported by Representative Smith of Butler county, who said that the appropriation was a waste of money, as there was ample machinery for the local authorities in Licking county to finish the prosecutions.

The total appropriations carried were $5,943,294.69. There were but three additions made as the bill was reported. To protect property at Grand Rapids in Wood county, $2,000 was allowed for a levee. To repair a cottage at the Girls' Industrial Home at Delaware, $5,000 was allowed, and $1,75 was given to the State Board of Agriculture to supply an omission in the pay of inspectors.

Following the passage of the general bill, Representative Walling of Pickaway, moved to take up out of its order, the Dean Senate bill, authorizing the expenditure of $5,000 to purchase the site for the Perry victory memorial on Put-in-Bay Island, explaining that the work would have to begin this year. The bill was unanimously passed.

Following this Representative John Stambaugh of Hardin, moved to substitute for his bill providing for the employment of the penitentiary convicts at the State Quarry west of Columbus, a duplicate bill by Senator Frazier of Richland, which passed the Senate this afternoon. The measure gives the penitentiary managers control of the quarry and appropriates $50,000 to install the necessary machinery to engage in the business of producing road building material. Representative John Cowan of Putnam, objected to the clause which permitted the sale of this material in competition with free labor, but his was the only vote in support of a change. The bill passed by a two-thirds vote and will be a law as soon as the Governor can sign it.

REPUBLICAN INSURGENTS AND REGULARS

Having War in the United States Senate—Fight on in Caucus This Afternoon.

Washington, April 26.—Difficulties between the regular and insurgent Republican senators over the organization of committees appear far from being healed, and a caucus called for this afternoon to consider the assignments agreed upon by the committee on committees may develop an absolute party break.

Two sessions of the committee were held yesterday and the regulars declined to meet insurgent demands, which they declared to be unreasonable.

The regulars have a large majority in the caucus, and it is not probable that the insurgents may carry their demands to the floor of the senate, which leaders in both factions admit would bring about a party split.

Four points of difference remain to be settled. LaFollette wants to go on interstate commerce, Cummins on finance, Bristow on foreign relations and Bourne on appropriations. All of these are members of the committee on committees. Apparently there is no difficulty about the assignments given by the regulars to members of the insurgent faction who are not on the committee on committees.

The issue between the regulars and insurgents is clearly defined, according to the views of each faction. The regulars insist they have given the insurgents everything to which they are entitled under the rules laid down—that of length of service, which gives to the minority the choice of a large number of important places.

BADLY WANTED BURGLAR IS CAPTURED

CITIZENS' COURAGE AND BRAVERY AIDED POLICE TO LAND BERSHIRE.

Confession Secured Which Cleared Up Jewelry Store Burglary At Zanesville.

Courtesy and bravery and prompt action of George Drake and J. H. Donaldson, two East Newark young men, resulted in the capture of Ed Berkshire, alias Ed Howell, while in the act of burglarizing the grocery store of Patrick Rogers, 429 Indiana street, at a late hour last night.

Berkshire is wanted at Zanesville for the burglary and robbery of McHenry & Stevens' jewelry store, last Saturday night. Captain Swank and Officers McClure and Hurbaugh, who were called, succeeded in getting a confession from Berkshire, in which he told where he had concealed the bulk of the jewelry stolen.

Donaldson and Drake, while passing the Rogers grocery, noticed some one in the place, and succeeded in capturing him. It proved to be Berkshire, a well known police character, and while one of them kept guard over the man the other notified police headquarters. Captain Swank and Officers McClure and Hurbaugh at once hurried to the scene and placed Berkshire under arrest.

When arrested he had packed up and all ready to carry away the following articles: Four pairs socks, three handkerchiefs, two plugs "J. T." tobacco, one plug American Navy, one plug Picnic twist tobacco and 15 stogies.

On his person when he was searched was found one ladies' hunting case watch, one gent's hunting case watch, one pearl handle pocket knife said to have been taken from the McHenry & Stevens jewelry store at Zanesville, which was burglarized last Saturday night.

Berkshire, when he realized officers had a clear case against him, confessed to robbing the Zanesville jewelry store and told where the rest of the loot was concealed.

He led the officers to the Panhandle water tank, a short distance east of the city and under a pile of ties drew out his overcoat. In it were found 7 bracelets, 2 ladies hunting case watches, 3 ladies watch cases, 7 gent's watch cases, 1 gold locket, 1 neck chain, 1 K. of P. charm and four rings, set with diamonds.

In consideration of the fact that the Zanesville burglary was the most important, Chief of Police Arter of that city was notified of the arrest, and he came here Monday night and took Berkshire to Zanesville.

Our Boys.

A Boy and His Work.

WHEN the boy is in his cradle—although cradles are quite out of fashion now, so he's not likely to be in one—but anyway when he is in the modern substitute for a cradle, the mother has fond dreams of his some day being in the White House. President? Of course; nothing less will do. And when the boy grows up and shows no disposition to rise above the job he has in the corner grocery store, she is sometimes bitterly disappointed. Or, perhaps, it is the father who has ambitions for the son which he firmly insists the son shall realize. And often, if his ambitions are not positive in character, they are negative. He may not insist upon the boy doing certain things. But he does insist that he shall not do certain other things.

How much of the choice as to what a boy shall do shall rest with the parents? Shall they choose altogether, shall they choose partly, or shall they have nothing whatever to do with it?

A certain mother is worrying herself and her son sick in this matter. She wants the boy to be a lawyer. Evidently, she has the White House vision. But the boy, now twenty, really a boy no longer; one sense, has been offered a fine position by an uncle in his butter and egg business—a good salary, a partnership in a year, with the possibility, for the uncle is unmarried, of the nephew's ultimately getting the business. The boy is a practical sort of fellow, and he wants to take his uncle's offer. But his mother scorns it. "Her son sell butter and eggs!" Perish the thought. And the boy who thinks a lot of his mother, yet has sense enough to have a keen business eye to the future, is distracted. He is in the West now recovering from a nervous breakdown brought on by the family dissension.

Another boy, tall, blue-eyed, looking as if he came of the race of the Vikings, longs for the sea. His father will hear none of it. He has him chained, so to speak, to an office chair. And the boy is eating his heart out.

On the other hand, there are parents, who, so their boys get positions or "jobs" as the case may be, give no further thought to the matter. All they are anxious for is that their boys earn a living. How they earn it does not concern them.

None of these, it would seem, is the wise or just course. It is hardly right to thrust a profession or an occupation upon a boy, as one thrusts him into long trousers. On the other hand, the boy's welfare is not being considered as it should be, when no thought is given by the parents as to the life-work he shall do.

No one is thoroughly happy or doing his best work, if he is not doing the work he wants to do, or for which he has some special talent. It should be the parents' duty to discover what this talent is and to develop it all possible. From childhood up, he should be watched, and that which he shows special ability or a preference for should be encouraged. The parent should not let his own wishes in the matter interfere. He should think of the boy, not of himself.

If the boy shows no decided preference, then as he grows older, he should be led to think about the matter. Judicious questioning and discussion may arouse an interest. And it is so important that a boy find his true work that no effort should be spared to help him to do so. Many a boy drifts from one "job" to another, and finally becomes a ne'er-do-well, simply because he has never found his right work. Did he once strike this, he would become useful and happy.

The right of choice is surely the boy's. He is the one who must do the work, who must live his life in his business. Therefore it should be one to his taste. But there should be on the part of the parents, wise supervision and counsel and training, so that he shall choose wisely. They all should work together. The boy should not be left entirely to his own devices. But the right of final decision should be his.

We Guarantee to Cure Dyspepsia—If We Fail the Medicine Costs Nothing.

To unquestionably prove to the people that indigestion and dyspepsia can be permanently relieved and that Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets will bring about this result, we will furnish the medicine absolutely free if it fails to give satisfaction to any one using it.

The remarkable success of Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets is due to the high degree of scientific skill used in devising their formula as well as to the care exercised in their manufacture, whereby the well known properties of Bismuth-Subnitrate and Pepsin have been combined with Carminatives and other agents.

DENISON BOYS AT CONFERENCE IN COLUMBUS

STUDENT VOLUNTEER UNION IN ANNUAL CONFERENCE AT O. S. U., COLUMBUS.

Spring Festival at Granville Will Be the Musical Event of the Year.
College Town Notes.

Granville, April 26.—At the annual conference of the Student Volunteer Union of Central and Southern Ohio, held at the Ohio State University in Columbus last Saturday and Sunday, Denison University was represented by 13 students. The conference was under the direction of C. A. Neyman, the retiring president of the union. The principal speaker was Prof. Soper of Ohio Wesleyan, who spoke Saturday afternoon, and Sunday evening on the "Development of the Realization of God's Missionary Purpose," first in the Old Testament and then in the early church. A large part of the time was given up to the discussion of the problems which came up before the union and its individual members. The officers elected for the coming term were: President, T. C. Leonard of Wittenberg; vice president, Julia S. Moore of Denison; secretary-treasurer, A. P. Fulwider of Ohio University.

The coming spring festival promises to be the greatest musical event of the year in Granville. One of the great attractions of the festival will be Louise Bernolt, the contralto with the St. Paul Symphony Orchestra. It was with the latter company that Louise Bernolt made her debut as an operatic singer last fall. Miss Bernolt was educated for the concert field. She had no thought of ever entering the field of opera until one day last fall, the manager of the Montreal Opera Company, who had heard Miss Bernolt sing, offered her an important position with his company and she accepted. Her success was almost instantaneous, and was perhaps as much a surprise to her as it was a gratification to her friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard D. Hamilton of Denver, Col., who have been visiting relatives and friends here during the past two weeks, left for Springfield, O., Tuesday, where they will make a short visit with their daughter, Mrs. Frank H. Morton, before returning home.

The oratorical contest was held in Franklin Literary Society Monday evening to choose a representative for the Lewis prize contest to be held in June. The orations were good and the program was as follows: "Shall We Fear Japan?" C. F. Flannery; "The Root of All Evil," A. G. Adams. The judges, Dr. Handley, Prof. Goodell and Prof. Wiley, decided in favor of Mr. Adams.

Charles, the 10-year-old son of George Williams, residing a short distance north of town, while splitting kindling Monday, struck his left hand with the hatchet, badly cutting it. Doctor took several stitches in the wound.

While things have been exceedingly quiet in the gas fields in Granville territory, there has been quite a little work in the development line going on and the indications are excellent for big work here this season. It has been clearly demonstrated to the satisfaction of experts that this is one of the most promising fields in Central Ohio, and considerable prospecting will be done during the next two or three months.

Mr. and Mrs. D. S. Anderson of Canton, who have been visiting relatives and friends here for a few days, have returned home, after having had a most enjoyable visit.

The prospects for a big fruit crop in this section were never better. All the orchards are in fine condition and unless the buds are nipped by late frosts, we will have plenty of fruit of all kinds.

Talking about the building prospects for Granville this season, a real estate man said to an Advocate reporter: "In my opinion Granville will enjoy a healthy building boom the coming season. Many people in all parts of town are talking of building and contracts for a number of residences have already been let. The preliminary work on some of them begun. It looks to me as though the town would enjoy a very creditable growth during the coming season."

The many friends of Col. Isaac DeBow will regret to learn that his condition has become very critical and considerable anxiety is felt as to the outcome.

Miss Mary Winder of Terre Haute, Ind., who has been visiting Miss Lillian Vernon, returned home Tuesday, after a very pleasant visit.

WHITE LIES. THE RETURN OF SHERLOCK HOLMES.

We stood outside of the door. Holmes stopped fiddling, took an injection of bensile and after examining the door-mat with a spectroscopic said: "There's been an old woman here named Jones who wore a wig and blue glasses and carried a skye terrier named Dido. She is deaf in her left ear, Watson."

"Marvelous!" I exclaimed. "That isn't all. She has had asthma twice this year; her brother-in-law conducts a Correspondence School in Birmingham and has a note coming due on Tuesday. He is a Scud and is cross-eyed, a plumber by trade but is a judge of pickles."

"You're some detective! But don't I smell smoke?"

"Yes," replied Holmes. "On closer examination I perceive the house to be on fire from cellar to garret. We must look into this, Watson! Kindly call a hansom and we will notify the fire department. There's mystery here. This fire started in the ice-box on the roof!"

The Secret of Holmes' great penetration is now solved. It has been discovered that he always had a confederate on the job. This man's name is now known to be Conan Doyle.

Daddy's Bedtime Story—

Rich Man and Poor Man

ONE evening daddy noticed that Evelyn looked sad. "What's the trouble, daughter?" he asked, and Evelyn told him that some little girls who lived near the home of Jack and Evelyn had refused to play with her because their daddies were wealthier than hers. "Don't worry, child," said daddy. "No doubt you can find other playmates." And that same evening this story of the rich man and the poor man was told by daddy.

"It happened in a country far away," began daddy, "that there were two men living. One was a very rich man, and one was a poor man who made his living by making baskets from reeds. The reeds grew in a marsh belonging to the poor man, but the marsh was in the way of his wealthy neighbor when he wanted to go hunting. So he asked the poor man to move away, and when the basket maker refused he called his men and had him put off his own land.

"The poor basket maker went to the king and complained. The king was wise and just, so he ordered the rich man taken away and left on a lonely island. And because he had forbidden his subjects to quarrel without coming to him with their disputes he ordered the poor man taken to the same island.

"Now, on that island there was a marsh in which grew reeds just like those from which baskets are made. The rich man tried to hide among the reeds, for he was afraid of the savages who lived on the island. But the savages soon saw him and the poor man and came to attack them.

"Then the two were afraid indeed. The rich man was the more scared, for he did not know at all what to do, but the poor man had a plan. When the savages came near to them he made signs meaning that he had something to give to them. The wild men stopped to look, so the basket maker quickly cut some of the reeds and made a coronet or crown. He took this and placed it on the head of the king or leader of the savages. The savage was greatly delighted and would not let his men harm the basket maker. Then the other savages crowded round and made signs that they, too, wanted crowns, and it kept the basket maker busy for some time making them.

"In the meantime the rich man, who was now poor, was trembling for his life. The savages wanted to kill him, but the basket maker told them by signs that even if the other man could not make baskets he could cut and gather the reeds for the crown. So they spared his life also.

"The two lived among the savages some months until the king of their own country sent for them. By that time the man who had been rich regretted his meanness and promised to give half his fortune to the basket maker when they should be back in their own country."

DINSMORE PLEADS GUILTY; GETS 1 YEAR

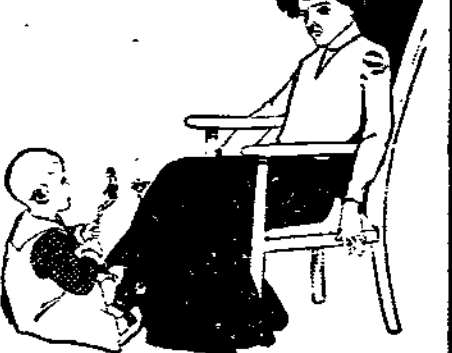

Columbus, April 25.—The graft trial of D. W. Dinsmore was stopped suddenly today when Dinsmore changed his plea to guilty of defrauding the state out of $400 in collusion with Mark Slater, former state printer now in the pen.
The prosecutor recommended mercy and Dinsmore was sentenced to one year in the penitentiary. Following his change of plea, all outstanding indictments against Slater and Dinsmore were nolle.
Eggs That Can't Be Found.
The eggs of some common birds of the present day have never been found. There is the robin snipe; its eggs have never been seen. An English zoologist kept a man going up and down the coast of Labrador for weeks purposely to get a robin snipe's egg, but it was in vain. The bird is known by thousands of people, but it breeds so far north and so remote from any civilization that no scientific observer can ever get to its nest ere the young are hatched and have taken to wing. The frigate bird that is so commonly seen at sea on the Pacific and off the West Indies is such a solitary bird and is so seldom seen in its nest during the hours of daylight that its egg is rare. It seems strange, but the eggs of so well known a bird as the sandpiper have never been found and are almost priceless. London Globe.

FIRE SCARE IN TRUST BUILDING

Can Filled With Rags and Paper in Junior's Room Ignited—Damage Very Slight.
The apartment was filled with a fire on Tuesday night, having been set in a room where was discovered, coming from a door on the third floor.
A man was stationed at the entrance of the building to hold the crowd in check, a large crowd having gathered at the entrance at 10 o'clock. The smoke was intense and it was some little time before the fire was located.
A considerable waste of time was found in a room used by the painter. A lighted match, cigar or cigarette stub had evidently been thrown into a refuse can filled with rags and paper, causing the contents of the can to ignite.
The fire was extinguished with a chemical tank and the damage was very slight.
Lots of men are shortsighted who don't wear glasses.

NINE YEARS AFTER

by O. F. LEWIS

EDWARDS returned from the telephone to the breakfast table, his hand still clutching his napkin, and two deep lines of annoyance between his eyes. He answered his wife's look of timid inquiry by casting down the napkin, deepening the frown, and gulping his coffee at a draught. Then:

"I've got to work to-day," he said. "But, Peter," protested his wife, "it's New Year's and you promised the children—"

"I know, I know," he nodded, "but this is what it means to be Superintendent of the Charities Bureau of New York. The man I engaged to keep the shop open to-day sends word he's sick, and so I've got to sit alone at a desk all day while other people are enjoying themselves."

"Couldn't you make some of the other employees do it for you?"

Edwards' face softened a little.

"No," he said; "you see, it's New Year's Day for them, too. It wouldn't be fair. I know there'll be virtually nothing for me to do when I get there, but we must keep open every day in the year, and I've got to be on the job."

He had already started for the door, but he turned back to kiss her.

"Don't worry," he added, forcing a smile; and he called back to her: "Perhaps I'll be of more use down there than I think now!"

Perhaps—but once he had settled himself in the office a mile from his own home, then indeed indications for any unusual usefulness were scarcely evidencing. Two hoboos called and were referred to the City Lodging House. A child entered with a lipping request for "mother's New Year's bathket" and left, you may be sure, as soon as she had volunteered the information that "mother" had already disposed of two other baskets. Then there came a man who wanted to consult the city directory and a woman who had mistaken this building for another.

A shuffling in the doorway aroused him, and he looked up with languid interest to greet a new applicant.

The man was, to all appearances, only a typical "down-and-outer." He might have been thirty years old, or he might have been fifty; forty-five, thought the superintendent, was a good guess. A week's growth of black bristles covered his pallid, sunken face; his clothes, though not shabby, were marred by the wrinkles that made it clear they had been worn by night as well as by day, and his long, nervous fingers twisted about a faded derby hat.

"Sit down," said Edwards. "What can I do for you?"

The man's eyes were raised directly to those of his interrogator, and then the superintendent observed the first point of difference between this man and the general type of petitioners who frequented the office. There were many who were sad, many who were sullen, many who were cunning—but the new visitor was sheerly bewildered. He was so much bewildered that he did not seem to heed the superintendent's question.

"What can I do for you?" Edwards repeated. "Do you want a meal?"

Then the man spoke. His voice was hollow and frightened.

"No," he said, "I just had one. I—I want help—quick! I'm scared."

"Of course," thought the superintendent, "alcoholism, heart disease, or delusions of persecution." But what he said was only: "Tell me about it."

The man sat down uneasily and put his hand to the back of his head as if in pain.

"Honest," he replied, "I ain't a bum. I've just had a bad fall, and I don't know who I am."

Edwards went straight to the point.

"How long," he asked, "have you been drinking?"

For the man pouted like a querulous child.

"Won't you please find out who I am?" he asked. "I saw the sign here, and it said this was a charity place. You won't believe me, but it's gospel truth: I've had a fall, I don't know what town this is, I don't know my name, and I don't know where I came from—though I think it was a jail."

Edwards began to grow interested. The tone rang true.

"Go on," he said.

"Well—the man's voice broke—"that's all. I'm lost, and I want to go home."

"Where's that?"

"I don't know. But I know I've got one; I'm sure of that. I have a wife—her name's Jennie—and I've got a little girl named Dorothy."

He put his face in his hands to hide his tears, and Edwards waited until the thin shoulders had ceased their heaving.

"I haven't been drinking," he continued at last. "When I picked myself up in that alleyway, I knew I had knocked back a lot of memory into my head. Straight! Listen: Did you ever hear of a man having two sets of memories, or two brains, or something?"

The superintendent nodded.

"Well," pursued the visitor, "I guess that's the trouble with me. When I was a boy in Mil—Mil—"

Oh, where was it I was a boy?" He groped for the name. "I can't get it."

"Milwaukee?" suggested Edwards.

"I don't know. Perhaps. Anyhow, when I was a boy I had what a doctor called double personality. You understand? Only, when I was the other fellow, and forgot my family and my name and all that, somehow they got me back right, after a few hours. The doctor said it would wear off. And when Dr. Wilson—for God's sake put that name down! Wilson—that's the doctor's name, all right. That's the first name I remember, this time!"

The superintendent was caught in the current. He scribbled the name upon a pad. "What then?" he asked.

"Let's see—let's see." The stranger was becoming vague again.

"You said you had a wife," Edwards coaxed.

"Oh, yes—I know now how I happened to go off the hooks the last time. I was in—in a train—and we were crossing a river—and there was a crash and we fell—down—down!" He sprang to his feet, reviving the past. "I can't get away!" he yelled.

Gently Edwards drew him again to the chair. "That was how you were hit," he said.

"Yes, and it knocked everything clean out of my head. I don't remember another thing till just now."

"When did it happen?" asked the superintendent, quickly.

"I remember there had been fireworks—it was the Fourth of July."

"And the year?"

"Why—why, this year, of course—1900." His moving eye sought the window. "And now there's the snow!" he added.

Edwards hesitated a minute, but took the plunge.

"This," said he, slowly, "is 1909."

The man's head sank forward on his breast.

"Nearly eight years!" he whispered. "Why, Jennie may be—What town's this?"

"New York."

"I used to do business in New York; I know I did. Perhaps Jennie—But no—"

Edwards gripped the man's shoulders hard. "Try—try—try to remember what your job was when you were on that train," he said. "Think, think!"

There was a long silence—so long that Edwards began to despair, his eyes roving the room as if for help. At last, however, the man's hand flashed to his pocket, and brought out a crumpled letter which he eagerly read.

"I guess that accounts for most of the time," he said, with a gleam of grim humor in his eye.

Edwards took the letter. It was from the warden of the Northern Penitentiary of Pennsylvania, and was addressed to a man in New York.

"The bearer of this," it ran, "is James Flynn. He has just completed in this prison a sentence of seven years for burglary which has been lessened by good conduct and for bravery when a fire threatened to enable a group of convicts to escape. I hope you can find him work, and I am sure you will find him worthy." The date was December 21st.

"What's this about this fire?" asked Edwards.

"You can search me!"

"What were you sent up for?"

"I don't know. I tell you I don't know anything! Lord, man can't you understand—can't you help?"

The superintendent gazed fixedly at his questioner. Here was something new in his experience. The man might be an ordinary impostor, or a not extraordinary lunatic. In either case, he was the truth to be established. How—His eye fell upon the telephone at his elbow and he seized the transmitter. "I am going to try," he said.

In fifteen minutes he was talking on the long-distance wire to the author of the letter.

"This," said he, "is the Charities Bureau of New York. There is a man here, James Flynn, released from your prison on December 21st—had seven years for burglary."

"Yes, I remember him."

"Where was he sent from?"

"I'll have to consult the records. Is it important?"

"It's vital."

"Very well."

There was a wait of a minute. Then—

"Committed from Lancaster."

"What charge?"

"Robbing the Eureka National Bank there."

"Thank you." The superintendent hung up the receiver and repeated what he had learned.

But Flynn shook his head.

"Lancaster sounds familiar," he said, "but I didn't live there, I know that."

Edwards was no detective, but one success with the telephone had taught him a lesson. He turned again to that instrument and called Lancaster, Flynn gripping the arms of his chair and listening, all intently.

"Oh, me police headquarters," said Edwards, "give me the chief's office. That the chief? Well, chief, this is the Charities Bureau of New York. Yes—Do you remember a robbery at the Eureka National Bank in your town about eight years ago?—Yes, I thought there would be many—Three men on the job? Well, do you remember James Flynn?—Yes, James Flynn—F-l-a-n-d-o-u-n, Flynn, one of the three. Oh, yes. You assumed that had tried to jump a freight on the cut-off and had fallen? Did you find any bones on him?—I wish you would look it up, please?"

Edwards placed his hand over the receiver and turned to Flynn.

"The chief says that in the get-away you were hit by an engine and that the foot was found by your side."

Flynn was leaning eagerly forward.

"I'm remembering," he cried, "I'm remembering! Ask him about a pocketbook I had. I always used to carry a pocketbook with my name inside and the place where I lived, but whether that was before the wreck, or—Ask him! Ask him!"

Edwards raised his hand for silence. The telephone was busy once more.

"Good!" He was speaking into the transmitter now. "Was there a pocketbook? You thought he'd stolen that, too? Well, what name was in it? Very distinctly, please." Edwards looked across the instrument and gazed steadily at Flynn as he repeated the words that the telephone, over all those average policeman's disinclination for any task of supererogation. He returned to the telephone, called the Philadelphia police station nearest to 1781 Hamilton Street, and asked a half dozen questions. Next he faced Marston.

"The lieutenant says," he explained, "that there's an officer in the rail room who has been on that beat for years. He—Wait: here he is now!"

He was once more talking into the phone, and Marston, his jaw set, his eyes staring, and the sweat springing from every pore, heard him continue:

"Yes, a family named Marston. What? Dead?—"

"The last man cried about."

"It can't be," he shouted. "It can't be!"

"Hush!" cautioned Edwards, and then, over the phone: "Are you sure? Oh, the husband died and the family moved away?"

"Thank God!" whispered Marston.

But Edwards was continuing:

"Married? She married?"

"What's that?" cried Marston. "Jennie?" he rushed to the telephone and tried to wrest the receiver from the superintendent's hand. "It's not true!" he yelled. "Give me that phone!"

Edwards pushed him away.

"Look out," he said, "be a man. Keep your nerve. Wait a minute, other," he continued into the phone.

"But if that's true," shouted Marston, "I must—I must—Good God, don't you see that then I must never come back to life?"

"Wait a minute," persisted Edwards, this time to Marston. "Who was married?" he asked of his distant interlocutor. "Oh, it was the daughter?"

And again Marston's dry lips framed the words "Thank God!"

"Well, where did the family move?" the superintendent continued. "To relatives? Couldn't you find

"Listen," said Edwards, "that is the Flatiron Building. It stands at the junction of Twenty-third Street, Fifth Avenue and Broadway. Do you remember now?"

"I think—I think I do—a little."

"Then you do know New York?"

"I must."

"Was your wife—was Jennie—a New Yorker?"

"I'm not sure. She had a relative who—It seems to me she had a relative."

"What sort?"

"A—an uncle. Yes, an uncle."

"Where did he live?"

"On Twenty-eighth Street."

"East?"

"I don't know."

"West?"

"Oh, I don't know."

"His name?"

"Clim—Clim." And Marston's eyes became those of a man that wakes from a heavy sleep. "I don't know," he moaned. "Please find her! Nine years!"

But the superintendent had now the hint he wanted. He went to a row of New York directories, took up the bulky volume for 1900, and ran a rapid finger down the list of Clintons. There was only one in Twenty-eighth Street—a Joseph H. Clinton—opposite whose name was the trade phrase he sought: "Leather goods."

Edwards turned to his telephone directory. The wind of destiny was blowing favorably once more. Joseph H. Clinton was still at the old address.

The superintendent called the number.

"Is Mr. Joseph H. Clinton there?"

"Yes, but he's just sitting down to his New Year's dinner."

"Good!" He was speaking into the transmitter now.

miles, was clicking into his ear. "H-en-ry Marston. Henry Marston!" he said.

Flynn had again sprung to his feet.

"And what address?" persisted Edwards. "1781 Hamilton Street, Philadelphia? Yes—Oh, yes, you're quite right; he probably did steal it. Thank you very much."

Edwards hung up the receiver and turned. Above him stood the executive, his dry lips working convulsively.

"I'm Marston!" he said. "I remember now! I remember!"

"Are you quite sure?" asked the superintendent.

"Sure?" gasped the visitor. "Why, I know that as well as I know my own name! Which is the next train to Philadelphia?"

But Edwards once more raised a protesting hand. "Wait a minute," he said. "Sit down again, please. That chief of police says there was some little money in the pocketbook that was found on you, and that they are sure you stole it, though they could never trace the Marstons in Philadelphia. Don't you see that—that that money in your family had vanished long before your arrest?"

"But I never was a thief in my right senses," Edwards protested.

"Except for the fact that probably haven't been at the Hamilton Street office for a long time."

Marston went white as the story he had heard dawned upon him. But his lips suddenly opened, and he was saying his last words for the next many years. The last words he had failed, they said, to find any Marstons in Philadelphia Street address. That was a good thing, and the last words he had really said to a police station. Had they waited thoughtfully, they might have reasoned that they had all this time been wanted. They could have told their own, without further evidence. It is not known what methods he will not to have used on the out where? All right; I'm much obliged, anyway."

Edwards shook his head.

"We're against a blank wall," he said, "and just when the road seemed to run so straight ahead. The other doesn't know where your family went—"

"And the neighbors? Why not ask them?"

"And the neighbors can't be got at because the whole block has been torn down to make place for a factory."

"Then there's no way?"

"Yes, there are a dozen ways—slower, but sure."

"Slower?" waited Marston. "Don't you understand what this means to me? Don't you—Why, when I was in business, if I'd been that slow selling goods—"

Instantly Edwards caught at the flying clew of automatic memory. He had heard, somewhere, of how trained psychologists treated such cases, and now he turned quickly upon Marston, whose eyes were growing glazed again. The superintendent snapped out his questions like shots from a magazine revolver: "Traveling salesman?" "Yes." "What line?" "Leather." "Know New York?" "Yes." "Work here?"

Marston faltered. "I don't know," he said.

Edwards clapped his hands sharply upon the man's shoulders.

"Think!" he commanded.

"I—I don't know, I—"

Marston's gaze was wandering aimlessly about the office. Suddenly, however, it became fixed, and he pointed wildly to the wall above Edwards' head.

"There!" he declared. "I know that place."

The superintendent's eyes followed the pointing finger. Marston was indicating a picture of the Flatiron Building above the superintendent's desk.

"What is it?" asked Edwards.

"I don't know, but I used to pass it every day when I was here."

"Well, I'm sorry, but I'm afraid I must interrupt him. I want to talk on a matter of importance."

There was a brief wait. Marston sitting the while like the prisoner who has been told that the jury has just agreed upon a verdict. Then a man's voice spoke to Edwards over the phone.

"This is Mr. Clinton," it said.

"I'm sorry to disturb you at your New Year's dinner. Mr. Clinton," the superintendent responded, "but I am very anxious to learn if you know anything about a Henry Marston who, I believe, used to be in your employ as a traveling salesman."

"Mr. Marston is dead."

"So I've been told, but for business reasons, I wanted to learn something about his death and his family."

"Mr. Marston was the Western representative of my firm, but was on a train that was wrecked crossing a river in Colorado in 1900."

"And his daughter?"

"Is married to my junior partner."

"Can you give me her address?"

"Really, I don't see—"

"I shall explain everything in a moment, Mr. Clinton."

"Well, she and her mother are just now here taking their New Year's dinner with me."

"Mr. Clinton," said Edwards, "was Mr. Marston's body ever found?"

"It was not. Why do you ask? Can you mean—"

"Mr. Clinton, if she can hear a great surprise, I think you had better ask the elder of your guests to the phone."

The superintendent got his answer and beckoned to the Man Who Had Been Lost.

"Mr. Marston," he said, "come here and talk to your wife."
